

Paper Flowers

Who doesn't love flowers? But, what's better than flowers that eventually die and some people are allergic to? Ones that last forever!

First: Learn how to make paper flowers! There are tons of tutorials and directions online depending on the type of flowers you want to make. Get some friends together and see how many you can make.

Second: Find a vase you can put your flowers in. You could make one if you're creative, or go to a dollar store or garage sale and buy an inexpensive one. Decorate it to make it pretty. The more vases and flowers, the better.

Third: Bring your creations to a local senior citizens center. Check with administrators there first to make sure it's okay to bring them in, but what a cute way to spread some color and joy to their rooms, their dining room, or their lobby!

Fourth: Work with a teacher to teach other students how to make the flowers so even more kids can make creations to share with others.

Take it a step further: Work with an adult to apply for a Random Act grant to offset the cost of art supplies!
